

NEED OF CODE OF CONDUCT

A well-written code of conduct clarifies an institution's mission, values and principles, linking them with standards of professional conduct. The code articulates the values that institution wishes to foster in students, teachers and other employees and, in doing so, defines desired behaviour. As a result, written codes of conduct or ethics can become benchmarks against which individual and institutional performance can be measured. A code of conduct serves as a fundamental standard and point of reference for daily decision-making. A code of conduct promotes ethical discourse and compliance, enabling staff to deal with moral conundrums they face on the job every day. Additionally, it can be a helpful resource for staff members to discover pertinent records, offerings, and other resources pertaining to ethics within the institution.
